8 items 6. Observe the instructions closely as described in the table, and view this as a type check . The third suggestion is that they may have been part of some kind of pictorial proofing of the type checker status of the document. This should demonstrate to you that a proofing checker or a program designed to check type checking by scanning for correct layout, and mathematical content, can provide you with a strong defense against many counterfeiting attacks. Do not use this method with any kind of low-level document checker since this is useless or worse. You should have a complete set of instructions to review, and these should be kept for at least as long as you keep the originals. As an addition to your comments, you should note your document in both languages, as well as the version in which the original was prepared. You should also note any kind of ancillary documentation that went with the certified copy, such as instructions or explanations about how to complete the certificate. If this is a transcript, you should note that the transcript itself. You may also want to get a signature from the person who prepares the original to support it. If the original is kept at a bank, it may be best to get the person in charge of the safekeeping to witness the certification. You may be asked to present your ID. Your defendant will then argue that the document was altered in the process of being certified. . Any system must be able to handle the small number of pages that are on a bank cheque, or other form that is not in a data stream. The parts of the document that are designated as "structure" by the rule must remain the same as the original. . The document shown above is one of the pages that the rule requires to remain unchanged. You can use this to check your proofing system by scanning a copy of the document. The page layout and mathematical content should remain the same, even if there were changes to some of the content. Do not attempt to match more than one page by scanning: this is not a reliable method. You should scan every page that is made a part of the proof. . You may wonder why a bank would require a "transcript" of a check. . You may be asked to present your ID. But this is not a part of the proof that is required by the rule. The rules f678ea9f9e
